New York – Siegelson, New York's most respected gallery of rare and collectible jewels, announces the exclusive representation of celebrated up-and-coming French jewelry designer Emmanuel Tarpin (b. 1992). Siegelson will present four pieces by Tarpin at Design Miami/ 2018 (stand G29) December 5–9, 2018. The Siegelson presentation at Design Miami marks the debut of these designs at an art or design fair and the first time that these pieces will be offered for acquisition by collectors.

At only 26 years old, Tarpin has already established himself as a noteworthy emerging talent in contemporary jewelry design, drawing inspiration from nature to create remarkable sculptural pieces. Known for his creative approach to jewelry making and his experimental work with metals, Tarpin exclusively creates one-of-a-kind pieces at his studio in Paris.

Tarpin developed an interest in sculpture at an early age, studying at the prestigious High School of Art and Design in Geneva. He then trained in the workshop of the French luxury jewelry company, Van Cleef & Arpels, for three years before establishing his own studio.

“I chose Siegelson because it is a company with real impact on the world of jewelry,” said Tarpin. “Lee Siegelson is known for presenting the best vintage high jewelry pieces, and I am excited to see him venturing into contemporary jewelry. To me, there is always a link between the worlds of contemporary and vintage.”

Lee Siegelson notes: “We are proud to represent the creations of Emmanuel Tarpin. When I first saw Emmanuel’s work, I was astonished by this young talent who is creating pieces every bit as impactful as Suzanne Belperron, Cartier, and Van Cleef & Arpels. We are thrilled to be showing his work at Design Miami/ 2018, and know that his ‘wearable sculpture’ will resonate with the discerning connoisseur every bit as much as the 20th and 21st century design and art objects on display in Miami Beach this week.”
