Mountainville, NY, July 16, 2020—Storm King Art Center will present a new, site-specific installation by New York-based artist Martha Tuttle (b. 1989, United States), marking the artist's first major outdoor work, as well as her first solo museum presentation.

On view from summer through fall, A stone that thinks of Enceladus is the eighth edition of Storm King's ongoing Outlooks program, which invites an emerging to mid-career artist to present a large-scale, temporary outdoor project in the Art Center's landscape. The presentation will include an online element accessible via Storm King's website, and a virtual poetry and performance series.

A stone that thinks of Enceladus continues the artist's interest in location and place, and the search for meaning within a landscape, from both an emotional and physical perspective. The work is comprised of about two hundred stones cast into glass and carved from marble which have been placed by Tuttle into stacks on top of larger boulders throughout the Storm King site. The glass and marble stones were created by the artist during the winter and spring of 2020. Through these carefully placed groupings, Tuttle invites viewers to recognize their own physicality both on and within land—at Storm King and in the Hudson Valley, specifically—by creating a point of contact between human and non-human energy. Visitors will be able to walk among the boulders that form the installation, providing viewers with space for reflection and contemplation. The work’s poetic title draws from the artist’s interest in connecting entities of vastly varying scale—the glass stones in the sculpture will reflect light in partial homage to Enceladus, one of Saturn’s moons, and one of the most reflective places in the solar system.

Tuttle’s project, which will unfold across eight acres of a large, rolling field at the southern end of Storm King’s property, builds upon the artist’s ongoing interest in how our relationship to materiality can connect us to the world we inhabit. The installation engages directly with Storm King’s landscape and invites visitors to experience its vast scale while also bringing attention to smaller private moments and physical elements within it, such as the lichen constellations on the boulders, or the changing quality of daylight experienced through the glass stones.

Nora Lawrence, Storm King’s Senior Curator, remarks, “Our Outlooks artists are encouraged to draw inspiration from Storm King’s site and history, and Martha Tuttle approached this task with remarkable sensitivity. A stone that thinks of Enceladus poetically addresses the very essence of Storm King’s vision: nurturing a bond between art, nature, and people. To be able to reopen Storm King’s site with Martha’s beautiful installation feels like a gift. Her work asks us all to consider our physical place, and to conjure the universe around us—a grounding and welcome prompt within the current moment.”

Martha Tuttle said: “With my Outlooks project, I wanted to engage viewers in a contemplation of how we who have bodies can develop a sense of intimacy with the vastness of land and its geologic time. Stones represent a deep, ancient force and yet simultaneously maintain a tactile and intimately scaled relationship to the human body. Cairns interest me because they continually reference back to the scale and the ability of the hand, and are as easily dismantled as they are constructed. I see internalizing the connectivity and the fluctuation between the human and non-human, animate and inanimate to be a necessary question of ecology.”

Working closely with the curatorial, education, and operations staff at Storm King, Tuttle’s work manifests online as a special feature and will be accompanied by a virtual poetry program accessible at stormking.org.

The Outlooks series allows Storm King to support individual artists, a critical piece of the Art Center’s mission. Prior Outlooks exhibitions at Storm King featured works by Jean Shin (2019), Elaine Cameron-Weir (2018), Heather Hart (2017), Josephine Halvorson (2016), Luke Stettner (2015), Virginia Overton (2014), and David Brooks (2013).

Outlooks: Martha Tuttle is organized by Storm King’s Senior Curator Nora Lawrence.

About Martha Tuttle

Martha Tuttle, a multidisciplinary artist born in Santa Fe, New Mexico, has shown her work throughout the U.S. and abroad. Natural materials of wool, silk, and dye are worked by hand, each resulting piece having undergone an immaterial transfer of energy through Tuttle’s physical and meditative touch. The artist’s relationship to materiality is revealed further by the inclusion of small “stones,” both actual and cast polished metal, and of fabricated steel weights. These elements add another layer of visual incident and mark-making, to further open a dialogue of possibility and substance, light and weight. Overall, the unification of immaterial energy with material form results in constructed canvases and loosely hanging paintings that vibrate with a felt, unseen force.

Solo and two-person exhibitions include Geukens & DeVil, Antwerp; Luce Gallery, Turin; Tilton Gallery, New York; and Rhona Hoffman Gallery, Chicago. Among others, she has been in residence at the Rauschenberg Foundation, Captiva, FL; the Sharpe-Walentas Studio Program, Brooklyn, NY; the UCross Foundation, Clearmont, WY; and A-Z West, Joshua Tree, CA. Tuttle earned her MFA in Painting from The Yale School of Art in 2015 and her BA at Bard College. She lives and works in Brooklyn, NY.

About Storm King Art Center

Storm King Art Center is a 500-acre outdoor museum located in New York's Hudson Valley, where visitors experience large-scale sculpture and site-specific commissions under open sky. Since 1960, Storm King has been dedicated to stewarding the hills, meadows, and forests of its site and surrounding landscape. Building on the visionary thinking of its founders, Storm King supports artists and some of their most ambitious works. Changing exhibitions, programming, and seasons offer discoveries with every visit.
